

航空大学校 2008 年実施 学力試験

英 語

リーディング・テスト(70 分) リスニング・テスト(約 20 分)

リーディング・テスト (I ~ III)

I 次の () に入る最も適当な語句を、A~D から選び記号で答えよ。(1 問 2 点)

1. The pen is () than the sword.

- A: harder B: mightier C: powerful D: taller

2. I saw board members () in the conference room.

- A: gathered B: gathering C: gatherings D: have gathering

3. There () many children in the park.

- A: are B: enjoy C: fall D: lie

4. I went to see the volleyball game yesterday. It was very ().

- A: excite B: excited C: excitement D: exciting

5. If you have any special or heavy items of baggage, or extra baggage which is over your free allowance, you should be aware () arrangements you need to make before you travel.

- A: its B: of what C: that D: where

6. When I was an elementary school student, I learned that the Earth () around the sun.

- A: move B: moved C: moves D: has moving

7. I () with the children and gave them advice on their batting skills.

- A: caught a play B: played ball catch C: played catch D: play catch ball

8. If I () her phone number, I could have called her.

- A: know B: knew C: had known D: had been known

9. This lantern will come in () when we are camping next month.

A: handy

B: kit

C: late

D: size

10. The thieves () the old lady into thinking that they were telephone engineers.

A: deluded

B: diagnosed

C: dispelled

D: dwindled

II 次の各文章の () に入る最も適当な語句を、A～D から選び記号で答えよ。(1問2点)

Air traffic controllers should get more rest and step up safety vigilance, U.S. safety investigators said on Tuesday in recommendations prompted by a deadly Comair crash and other (1) calls.

“Controllers are sometimes operating in a state of fatigue because of their work schedules and poorly managed utilization of their rest periods between shifts, and that fatigue has contributed (2) controller errors,” Mark Rosenker, chairman of the National Transportation Safety Board, wrote in a letter to the Federal Aviation Administration.

(1) A: close

B: cold

C: divine

D: free

(2) A: at

B: in

C: of

D: to

Medical researchers keep looking for less invasive ways to perform operations. The aim is to cut less and to reduce pain and recovery time. Some researchers see a future in NOTES. NOTES is short for Natural Orifice Translumenal Endoscopic Surgery.

In simple terms, what this means is the removal of diseased organs through the body's natural openings. For example, a man in California recently had his appendix (3) through his mouth.

Twenty-five years ago, having your appendix (3) meant staying in the hospital for as long as a week. Patients returned home with an ugly and permanent scar on their abdomen.

But since the late nineteen eighties, laparoscopic surgery has gained popularity. It leaves only small marks where holes were made in the skin. The doctor works with a system called a laparoscope, usually connected to a video camera. Laparoscopic surgery (4) requires a hospital stay.

With the newest kind of surgery, doctors make a small cut in the patient's belly (5). A camera is placed through the hole to help guide the surgical instrument.

- | | | | | |
|-----|--------------|---------------|----------------|------------------|
| (3) | A: removal | B: removing | C: removed | D: to be removed |
| (4) | A: always | B: absolutely | C: necessarily | D: rarely |
| (5) | A: breathing | B: band | C: button | D: flop |

Ovarian cancer is known (6) a "silent killer" because it is usually discovered too late to save a woman's life. But three cancer groups in the United States have now agreed on a list of possible early signs of the disease.

The statement is the first of its kind to recognize what ovarian cancer survivors have long believed: that there are common symptoms. Researchers have found that these symptoms are more likely to happen in women with ovarian cancer than women in general.

One symptom is bloating, or expansion of the abdomen area. Pain in the abdomen or the pelvis can be another symptom. Also, researchers say women with early-stage ovarian cancer may urinate more often or with greater urgency. And the statement says another common symptom is difficulty (7) or feeling full quickly.

- (6) A: as B: for C: of D: to
- (7) A: ate B: eating C: to eat D: to eating

During the nineteenth century, women's education was not considered important in the United States. Supporters of advanced education for women faced many problems.

States (8) require each town to provide a school for children, but teachers often were poorly prepared. Most young women were not able to continue on with their education in private schools. If they did, they often were not taught much (9) the French language, how to sew clothing, and music. Mary Lyon felt that women's education was extremely important. Through her lifelong work for education she became one of the most famous women in nineteenth century America. She believed that women were teachers both in the home and in the classroom.

And, she believed that efforts to better educate young women also served God. (10) women were better educated, she felt, they could teach in local schools throughout the United States and in foreign countries.

- (8) A: did B: do C: were D: was
- (9) A: but for B: by C: except D: with
- (10) A: Although B: But C: If D: Otherwise

Ⅲ 次の文章を読んで、以下の設問に答えよ。

The past decade has been the rise of something Mao sought to stamp out forever: a Chinese middle class, now estimated to number between 100 million and 150 million people(1). Though definitions vary - household income of at least $10,000 a year is one standard - middle-class families tend to own an apartment and a car, to eat out and take vacations, and to be familiar with foreign brands and ideas. They owe their well-being to the government's economic policies, but in private they can be very critical of the society they live in.

The state's retreat from private life has left people free to choose where to live, work, and travel, and material opportunities expand year by year(2). A decade ago most cars belonged to state enterprises; now many families own one. In 1998, when the government launched reforms to commercialize the housing market, it was the rare person who owned an apartment. Today home ownership is common, and prices have risen beyond what many young couples can afford - as if everything that happened in America over 50 years were collapsed into a single decade.

But pick up a Chinese newspaper, and what comes through is a sense of unease at the pace of social change. Over several months in 2006, these were some of the trends covered in the Xinmin Evening News, a popular Shanghai daily: High school girls were suffering from eating disorders. Parents were struggling to choose a suitable English name for their child. Teenage boys were reading novels with homosexual themes. Job seekers were besieging Buddhist temples because the word for "reclining Buddha," wofu, sounds like the English word "offer." Unwed college students were living together(3).

Parents struggle to teach their children but feel their own knowledge is obsolete ; children, more attuned to social trends, guide their parents through the maze of modern life(4). "Society has completely turned around," says Zhou Xiaohong, a sociologist at Nanjing University who first noticed this phenomenon when his own father, a retired military officer, asked him how to knot a Western tie. "Fathers used to give orders, but now fathers listen to their sons."

Because their parents have such high hopes for them, children are among the most pressured, inhabiting a world that combines old and new and features the most punishing elements of both. The traditional examination system that selects a favored few for higher education remains intact(5). The number of students entering college in a given year is equal to 11 percent of the college-freshman-age population, compared with 64 percent in the United States. Yet the desire to foster well-rounded students has fed an explosion of activities - music lessons, English, drawing, and martial arts classes - and turned each into an arena of competition.

Such pursuits bring little pleasure. English ability is graded on five levels stretching through college, and parents push children to pass tests years ahead of schedule. Cities assess children's piano playing on a ten-level scale. More than half of preteens take outside classes, a survey found, with the top reason being "to raise the child's future competitiveness."

Parents tend to follow trends blindly and to believe most of what they hear. The past is a foreign country, and the present too(6).

1. 下線部(1)を日本語に訳せ。(5点)
2. 下線部(2)を日本語に訳せ。(5点)
3. 下線部(3)を日本語に訳せ。(10点)
4. 下線部(4)を日本語に訳せ。(7点)
5. 下線部(5)を日本語に訳せ。(7点)
6. 下線部(6)を日本語に訳せ。(6点)