The figures from British Airways were expected to be bad — but not this bad. They are also in sharp contrast (問 1) the airline's performance last year when it made more than a billion dollars in profit.

The airline is blaming two factors: firstly, the cost of fuel which was at near record high at this time last year, and secondly, the credit crunch which is affecting many airlines.

Even more (問 2) are the comments from BA's chief executive, Willie Walsh. He says this is the harshest trading environment the company has ever faced and he can see no reasons for things to improve in the near future.

1: in

2: for

3: within

4: to

(問 2)

1: ominous

2: lucky

3: honest

4: fortunate

A research study published this week suggests that after the end of a relationship, a broken heart really can hurt. The study in the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences, shows that physical pain and the emotional pain can 'hurt' in the same way.

You've broken up (問 3) your girlfriend or boyfriend, your wife or husband has left you and you feel rejected, dejected, broken-hearted. Well, new research suggests that intense feelings of rejection are as hurtful (問 4) physical pain.

The lead author of the study, Ethan Kross, said the reason is because the same regions of the brain that become active in response to painful sensory experiences are also activated during intense experiences of social rejection.

The researchers hope their findings will offer new insight into how the experience of intense social loss may lead to various physical pain symptoms and disorders.

They also confirmed the notion that people from different cultures all around the world use the same (問 5), words like 'hurt' and 'pain', to describe the experience of both physical pain and social rejection.

(問 3)	1: at	2: in	3: into	4: with
(問 4)	1: as	2: does	3: more	4: to
(問 5)	1: rejection	2: language	3: intention	4: culture

Rice is an important part of many people's diets. Researchers from the Harvard School of Public Health in Massachusetts have released a report about rice. It shows that eating white rice increases the risk of type two diabetes. However, eating brown rice reduces the risk of the disease.

The World Health Organization says more than two hundred twenty million people worldwide have diabetes. Type two diabetes results when the body cannot effectively use the sugar it produces.

More than thirty-nine thousand men and one hundred fifty-seven thousand women took part (問 6) the study. They were asked about their diet and day-to-day activities, as well as any pre-existing diseases. The study found that the people who ate five or more servings of white rice per week had a 17% increased risk of developing type two diabetes. But those (問 7) ate two or more servings of brown rice a week had an 11% reduced risk of getting the disease.

(問 6)	1: at	2: for	3: in	4: with
(問 7)	1: when	2: where	3: which	4: who

Abortion is banned in Ireland, except (問 8) cases where the mother's life is in danger. An amendment banning abortion was added to the Irish constitution in 1983 to preempt a Roe a Wade-style legal challenge.

Abortion rights groups estimate that more than 100,000 Irish women have traveled to the United Kingdom to obtain abortions since 1983, a practice that was formally legalized in 1992. Irish voters under 35 overwhelmingly support overturning the ban, (問 9) a result of the Catholic Church's declining influence in the Republic.

Anti-abortion groups won't give up without a fight, however, and in recent years have invited leaders from the U.S. anti-abortion movement to Ireland to discuss tactics for opposing legal challenges to the ban. The abortion controversy resurfaced last year in the debate over (問 10) of the Lisbon Treaty, a proposed EU measure to deepen European integration. "No" campaigners spread false rumors that the treaty would give the EU control over Irish abortion laws; despite emphatic denials from the Irish government and the archbishop of Dublin, fears over abortion were likely a significant reason why Irish voters rejected treaty.

Ⅲ 次の文章を読んで以下の設問に答えよ。

Some American parents might think their children need better educations to compete with China and other countries. But how much do the parents themselves need to change?

A new book called "Battle Hymn of the Tiger Mother" by Amy Chua has caused a debate about cultural differences in parenting. Ms.Chua is professor at the Yale Law School in New Haven, Connecticut, and the mother of two daughters. She was raised in the American Midwest by immigrant Chinese parents

In the Chinese culture, the tiger represents strength and power. In her book, Ms. Chua writes about how she demanded excellence from her daughters. For example, she threatened to burn her daughter's stuffed animals unless she played a piece of music perfectly. She would insult her daughters if they failed to meet her expectations.

Ms. Chua told NBC television that she had a clear list of what her daughters, Sophia and Louisa, were not permitted to do.

“Attend a sleepover, have a playdate, watch TV or play computer games, be in a school play, get any grade less than an ‘A.’”

Many people have criticized Amy Chua. Some say her parenting methods were abusive. She even admits that her husband, who is not Chinese, sometimes objected to her parenting style. But she says that was the way her parents raised her and her three sisters⁽¹⁾.

Ms Chua makes fun of her own extreme style of parenting. She says she eased some of the pressure after her younger daughter rebelled and shouted, “I hate my life! I hate you!”

Ms. Chua says she decided to retreat when it seemed like there was a risk (that she might lose her daughter. But she also says American parents often have low expectations of their children’s abilities.

“One of the biggest differences I see between Western and Chinese parenting is that Chinese parents assume strength rather than fragility⁽²⁾.”

Stacy DeBroff has written four books on parenting.

“ I think that the stirring of this intense debate has to do with what does it mean to be a successful parent and what does it mean to be a successful child? ”

Ms. DeBroff says Amy Chua’s parenting style is not limited to Chinese families. She says it represents a traditional way of parenting among immigrants seeking a better future for their children⁽³⁾.

But she also sees a risk. When children have no time to be social or to follow their own interests, they might not develop other skills that they need to succeed in life. Stacey DeBroff advises parents to develop their own style of parenting and not just repeat the way they were raised⁽⁴⁾.
