

航空大学校 2013 年実施 学力試験

英 語

リーディング・テスト(70 分) リスニング・テスト(約 20 分)

リーディング・テスト (I ~ III)

I 次の ( ) に入る最も適当な語句を、1~4 から選び記号で答えよ。 (1 問 2 点)

問 1. He ( ) until 10 o'clock yesterday.

1: arrived

2: get up

3: made

4: worked

問 2. Mr. Yamada is ( ) instructor.

1: me

2: our

3: us

4: we

問 3. To ( ) matters worse, Mr. Ito does not have the qualification required for the job.

1: make

2: say

3: speak

4: tell

問 4. Mary is the woman ( ) attended the meeting the other day.

1: what

2: when

3: who

4: whose

問 5. I'm sorry to have kept you ( ) for such a long time.

1: wait

2: waited

3: waiting

4: waits

問 6. A: What time is it now?

B: ( ).

1: Four times

2: Four times a day

3: Few times

4: Quarter to four

問 7. It is necessary for a child to have ( ) with his or her mother.

1: personal language

2: physical contact

3: skin care

4: skin ship

問 8. Their salaries should be set in proportion ( ) their sales.

1: by

2: into

3: to

4: as

問 9. Anybody ( ) in watching a tournament is advised to look at the Japan Football Association homepage for information.

1: interest

2: interested

3: interesting

4: interests

問 10. My new assistant is so good at his job that I can't ( ) he's fresh out of college.

1: believe

2: consume

3: extrapolate

4: negate

II 次の各文章の ( ) に入る最も適当な語句を、1～4 から選び記号で答えよ。(1 問 3 点)

What is the best way ( 問 1 ) learn a new language? A small study of foreign language learning in adults compared two methods. One is known as the explicit or classroom method. This is the kind of traditional classroom teaching where students are taught a lot of information about grammar rules.

The other method is known as the implicit or ( 問 2 ) method. The idea here is to learn much the way children do when they learn a native language. That is, by being with native speakers and absorbing the language that surrounds them, generally without a lot of explanation.

(問 1) 1: as

2: in

3: to

4: with

(問 2) 1: describing

2: estimating

3: immersion

4: instruction

Italians' love for fast cars is legendary. But glamour is, it would seem, no defense against the current ( 問 3 ).

New figures from the Italian motor dealers' federation show that the country's best known luxury sports cars, Ferrari and Maserati, have seen their sales in Italy plummet over the past year; Ferrari's by more than 56%, Maserati's by 72%.

The actual number of vehicles sold is, of course, tiny. Just 248 Italians forked out for a Ferrari last year, not surprising, perhaps, when each car costs the equivalent of up to $300,000.

The head of the motor traders' federation blamed high taxes for the fall in sales.

However, while poorer Italians may register an uncharacteristic flicker of schadenfreude at the news that their richer compatriots are cutting back, they won't have much time to gloat.

Official figures recently showed that almost a third of Italians are on the ( 問 4 ) of poverty, while the average Italian family is bracing itself ( 問 5 ) an extra €585 of government taxes.

* schadenfreude: 他人の不幸を喜ぶ気持ち

- |       |                     |                   |                   |                  |
|-------|---------------------|-------------------|-------------------|------------------|
| (問 3) | 1: economic booming | 2: economic gloom | 3: economical car | 4: economy hotel |
| (問 4) | 1: advice           | 2: bank           | 3: initiative     | 4: verge         |
| (問 5) | 1: as               | 2: for            | 3: on             | 4: without       |

According to the new report released today by the Pew Research Center, this record, 40% of mothers are now the primary breadwinners, is a ( 問 6 ) in the changing dynamics of the modern American family.

But Carol Evans, President of Working Mother Media, says the times haven't caught up with this shift. "This country is sorely lacking in the basic support that a woman needs to be the breadwinner".

Last year, full-time employed women still earned just 81% of the salaries of their male counterparts. And the US is one of only three countries that does not guarantee paid maternity ( 問 7 ).

With so many working mothers now bringing home the bacon, Evans suggests it's time for America to wake up and smell the coffee.

- |       |                    |              |              |               |
|-------|--------------------|--------------|--------------|---------------|
| (問 6) | 1: bakery employee | 2: foreigner | 3: milestone | 4: unmarried  |
| (問 7) | 1: blue            | 2: dress     | 3: leave     | 4: protection |

More fat, more sugar, more salt, less exercise — more and more people around the world are suffering the (問8). Since 1980, the WHO's report reveals levels of obesity have doubled in every region of the world. Half a billion people, or 12 percent of the global population, are now considered obese. One in three adults suffer from high blood pressure — a condition that causes half of all deaths from stroke and heart disease. And blood sugar levels are rising too — 10 percent of the world's population is (問9).

The WHO's report is not all bad news though: the statistics show that maternal mortality rates have fallen dramatically in the last 20 years, from over half a million in 1990 to less than 300,000 in 2010. And vaccination campaigns have significantly reduced deaths from childhood diseases such as measles.

But the global rise in deaths from heart disease, cancer and diabetes, and the rise in the conditions which lead to those deaths, is causing alarm. The WHO wants all its member states to tackle risk factors such as poor diet, and smoking, and set (問10) for reducing deaths.

- |       |               |                 |                |             |
|-------|---------------|-----------------|----------------|-------------|
| (問8)  | 1: activities | 2: consequences | 3: experiences | 4: medicine |
| (問9)  | 1: acrophobia | 2: diabetic     | 3: illiterate  | 4: measles  |
| (問10) | 1: ahead      | 2: context      | 3: sail        | 4: targets  |

Ⅲ 次の文章を読んで、以下の設問に答えよ。

Here's a scenario few restaurants would dare to dream of: All tables fully booked a month ahead, all year round; lines outside an hour before opening time; a prompt turnover of satisfied customers, with as many as three rotations per evening<sup>(1)</sup>. And a bulging bottom line.

It sounds almost as unbelievable on the other side of the counter. Gourmet cuisine, prepared to order by chefs from Michelin-starred restaurants, featuring premium ingredients such as lobster, foie gras, duck or wagyu beef — all for a target price (for the food) of ¥3,000 per head.

There must be a catch. Indeed there is, though it's one nobody's complaining about: You have to eat standing up. And no matter how good the food, you dine and then leave, rather than lingering for a leisurely feast<sup>(2)</sup>. Welcome to the alternative dining world of the Value Create group of restaurants.

Standing bars are nothing new in Japan and nor is the idea of eating on your feet, though most people associate it with cheap, slurp-and-run noodle counters at railway stations — and most definitely not with fine dining. It took the Value Create group to grab the concept, stand it on its head and run with it.

The first restaurant, called Ore no Italian, opened in Shimbashi in November 2011. Despite the name — ore no means “my” but is only used among men in very casual situation — it was not the usual cheap ‘n’ cheerful pasta and pizza joint. It also served quality starters and main dishes, such as beef fillet Rossini and foie gras

It was an instant success, spawning clones across town. Before long (in May 2012), the first Ore no French opened in the plush streets of Ginza. The concept is the same: Skilled chefs headhunted from top restaurants prepare signature dishes with prime ingredients, and you eat for less than the price of a cheap bottle of plonk<sup>(3)</sup>. Not surprisingly, this too has proved a massive hit.

The brain behind Value Create is not some whizz-kid MBA with wealthy parents and a hotline to venture capital. Takashi Sakamoto, already a success story as the founder and former CEO of Book Off (a chain selling secondhand CDs, DVDs and game software, as well as books), was 69 when he launched the first Ore no Italian.

Not content with his growing stable of Italian and French restaurants — there are now half a dozen in Ginza alone — he is turning his attention to Japanese cuisine. Ore no Yakiniku, in Kamata on Tokyo’s southernmost edge, specializes in grilled barbecue using top-of-the-range A5-grade wagyu beef. One floor up, Ore no Yakitori does the same with grilled chicken and side dishes ranging from uni (urchin) and karasumi (bottarga roe) to lobster.

But it has been the arrival in March of Ore no Kappo, also in Ginza, that has really set a new benchmark. Its executive chef is Hiroshi Simada, whose CV includes a long stint at the exclusive, three-star Azabu Yukimura and whose current restaurant, a one-counter kappo (high-end traditional Japanese eatery) that also follows the affordable all-standing approach, has been bankrolled by Sakamoto.

This is just the start, though. Plans are under way to take Ore no Kappo to New York. It’s a gamble, but Sakamoto is confident the idea (and the business principles) will work anywhere. If it catches on, it could revolutionize Japanese cuisine — or at least the way it is priced — forever in America<sup>(4)</sup>.

- 問 1. 下線部(1)を日本語に訳せ。(10 点)
問 2. 下線部(2)を日本語に訳せ。(9 点)
問 3. 下線部(3)を日本語に訳せ。(5 点)
問 4. 下線部(4)を日本語に訳せ。(6 点)