

航空大学校 2017 年実施 学力試験

英 語

リーディング・テスト(70 分) リスニング・テスト(約 20 分)

リーディング・テスト (I ~ III)

I 次の () に入る最も適当な語句を、1~4 から選び記号で答えよ。

(1 問 2 点)

問 1. I couldn't make () understood in English.

- 1: me 2: mine 3: my 4: myself

問 2. Gilbert () to an artist.

- 1: is married 2: married 3: marries 4: marrying

問 3. William looked at a picture () the wall.

- 1: during 2: from 3: on 4: with

問 4. His work is known () its theatrical style and creative use of shadows.

- 1: about 2: for 3: on 4: to

問 5. Every year we () from a critical shortage of water.

- 1: are suffered 2: suffer 3: suffering 4: were suffered

問 6. () she can speak English, she can't write it.

- 1: In order to 2: In regard to 3: In spite of 4: Though

問 7. I () have known it would be a waste of time asking.

- 1: can 2: might 3: ought 4: need

問 8. John was afraid ().

- 1: him being hurt 2: his being hurt
3: of he being hurt 4: of his being hurt

問 9. () what is often believed, most of the world's population is bilingual or multilingual.

- 1: As long as 2: Contrary to 3: However 4: Providing 問 10. His pupils () when the doctor put eye drops in them.

- 1: dilated 2: flailed 3: outdid 4: repulsed

Ⅱ 次の各文章の () に入る最も適当な語句を、1～4 から選び記号で答えよ。

(1 問 3 点)

Two doctors who work at a university hospital in Michigan, USA, kept seeing babies die. The babies were dying because air could not pass into their lungs — their (問 1) were not strong. The doctors wanted to help the babies.

They met one baby who was going to die very soon from this problem. They gave him a 3D printed (問 1b) splint. The splint kept his (問 1b) open, will grow with him, and later will (問 2) so nothing will stay in his (問 1b).

It is three years later and that baby, along with two more babies who had the same problem, is happy and healthy.

- (問 1) 1: airways 2: beds 3: cars 4: objects

(問 1b)は(問 1)の単数形

- (問 2) 1: bleed 2: breathe 3: close 4: dissolve

A helicopter's rotors allow it to do things an airplane cannot.

(問 3) an airplane, a helicopter does not have to move quickly through the air to have lift. That fact means it can move straight up or down. Most airplanes cannot do this. A helicopter can take off or land without a (問 4). It can turn in the air in ways airplanes cannot.

(問 3) an airplane, a helicopter can fly backwards or sideways. It also can hover in one spot in the air without moving. This makes helicopters ideal for things an airplane cannot do. For example, a helicopter can pick someone with a medical problem up (問 5) there is no (問 4). It can then land in a small area on top of a hospital.

(問 3) 1: As for 2: Excepting 3: In addition to 4: Unlike

(問 4) 1: lift 2: parking apron 3: pilot 4: runway

(問 5) 1: or down 2: or something 3: what 4: where

When you drink beer, your liver has to go into overdrive to detoxify the alcohol. Now add a few packets of crisps to the equation, maybe some peanuts and those calories are there to stay. Beer itself is pretty calorific stuff, to the tune of around 150 calories a unit so that's why beer makes you (問 6), well that starts to seem obvious.

Now why does it give you a beer belly specifically? Well the answer is down to two things apparently — gender and age. After about the age of 35 most men's (問 7) start to slow down. While men tend to put weight on their bellies, women's fat stores commonly go on their backside and hips.

(問 6) 1: fat 2: are fat 3: be fat 4: to fat

(問 7) 1: metabo 2: metabolic 3: metabolisms 4: metaphysics

Comedian Pikotaro's music video "Pen-Pineapple-Apple-Pen," (問8) as "PPAP," that recently went viral on social media has entered the weekly U.S. Billboard Hot 100 singles chart at 77th. It is the first time in 26 years that a Japanese artist has made the U.S. chart. The last was singer Seiko Matsuda, whose song "The Right Combination" reached No. 54 in 1990. Billboard says the song, which lasts just 45 seconds, is the shortest-ever to make it into the Hot 100. Chart rankings are determined by the number of radio air plays, sales and online streams.

Currently, Pikotaro's video is available on streaming services such as Spotify and can also be downloaded from iTunes. The video has been viewed more than 55 million times since it was uploaded Aug. 25. It topped YouTube's weekly chart for two weeks in a row, getting a major boost after Canadian pop star Justin Bieber (問9) it to his followers on Twitter, saying it's "my favorite video on the internet."

In the video, Pikotaro, dressed in garish animal-print lounge wear, wraparound sunglasses and a punch perm, dances in a humorous style and repeats simple lyrics (問10) mainly of three words: "apple," "pineapple" and "pen." Phrases such as "This is a pen" and "This is an apple" are traditionally the first English phrases students in Japan learn in school.

- | | | | | |
|-------|----------------|----------------|-----------------|---------------|
| (問8) | 1: abbreviated | 2: initiated | 3: short | 4: stand |
| (問9) | 1: assigned | 2: recommended | 3: resorted | 4: suspended |
| (問10) | 1: consistency | 2: consistent | 3: consistently | 4: consisting |

Ⅲ 次の文章を読んで、以下の設問に答えよ。

(30 点)

It is supposed to be a rare opportunity for Japan's harried workers to clock off early and go home to their families — or, if the government gets its way, help boost consumer spending in the world's third biggest economy.

In a country where many employees are more accustomed to burning the midnight oil rather than carousing Tokyo's bars during daylight hours, Japan's first Premium Friday has received a mixed response⁽¹⁾.

Faced with slack consumption and soul-searching over Japan's notoriously poor work-life balance, the government is asking companies to allow their workers to leave at 3pm on the last Friday of the month.

The hope is that they will use those extra hours of freedom to shop, make an early start to their Friday libations or go on a weekend break⁽²⁾.

The initiative is also part of a wider attempt to address the punishingly long hours many Japanese are expected to work, prompted by the suicide of a 24-year-old employee at the advertising firm Dentsu who was doing more than 100 hours' overtime in the months before her death.

While some major companies, such as Honda, the drinks maker Suntory and the confectioner Morinaga, have adopted the optional scheme, others are less enthusiastic about the prospect of a mid-afternoon staff exodus.

A survey of 155 big companies by the Nikkei business newspaper showed that 45% had no immediate plans to implement the scheme, with 37% saying they had either decided to enter into the spirit of Premium Friday or had plans to do so.

In another poll of 1,603 workers by Culture Convenience Club, just 3.4% said their employers would allow them to clock off early.

"Excessive working hours have become a big problem," said Etsuko Tsugihara, the chief executive of public relations firm Sunny Side Up. "We were thinking of ways to improve our own working environment when the government came up with Premium Friday, and we thought it was a good idea."

Maki Suzuki, a Suntory employee, and her colleagues resisted the temptation to shop or dine out early, and spent the afternoon at an art museum in Tokyo instead. "This is a good opportunity to plan something that we don't usually do," said Suzuki, who often works late. "Taking a long holiday is too big a hurdle for many Japanese, but taking an afternoon off isn't."

Previous attempts to encourage Japanese employees to spend less time at work have had little success.

The country's employees used, on average, only 8.8 days of their annual leave in 2015, less than half their allowance, according to the health ministry. That compares with 100% in Hong Kong and 78% in Singapore — places hardly known as havens for the work-shy.

Junior employees who routinely go home late, despite having little to do, cite the convention of not leaving work before their superiors, while putting in long hours is still widely seen as a true measure of corporate loyalty(3).

"We're hoping to boost spending by changing our lifestyle, the way we work and the way we think," said Masanao Ueda, a senior official at the major business lobby Keidanren, which has asked its 1,300 member firms to implement the scheme. "It's hard for Japanese workers to take a day off so we need to create conditions in which everyone can take a holiday."

The Tokyo metropolitan government is trying to tackle long working hours simply by switching off the lights at 8pm, while the leasing company Orix says it will offer financial incentives to employees who take five consecutive days' holiday.

The Premium Friday campaign is expected to boost consumption by up to 63.5 billion yen a year, SMBC Nikko Securities said in a report. But some experts have said cutting down on overtime could lower wages and suppress consumer spending(4).

Some companies are hoping to cash in on Premium Friday, including a railway operator that is laying on afternoon "booze trips", and a clinic that is offering discounts on health checks.

The prime minister, Shinzo Abe, said he would be setting an example by spending the afternoon practising meditation at a Zen temple before attending a concert.

The government's chief spokesman, Yoshihide Suga, told journalists he would be leaving the office as soon as he had briefed them. "Unfortunately I have to hold this press conference," he said. "But as soon as I'm done, I'm going to go and do something."

問 1. 下線部(1)を日本語に訳せ。(8 点)

問 2. 下線部(2)を日本語に訳せ。(6 点)

問 3. 下線部(3)を日本語に訳せ。(12 点)

問 4. 下線部(4)を日本語に訳せ。(4 点)